Water as interface - between human and technology, materiality and immateriality, - physical and virtual experience.

The Dornbracht Research Lab, initiated by Mike Meiré, explores unknown experiences at the intersection of space, technology and water.

Focusing on the question how new technologies can change - or even replace - the physical and emotional interaction between humans and water, Dornbracht embarks on an experimental journey into the future of the bathroom.

Within a subversive, laboratory-like setting, Virtual Reality applications allow visitors to experience the materiality of water anew.
